

Sicily: The most beautiful beaches - Ionic Coast (Sicilia daMare Book 1)

DescriptionThe landscape of the oriental, Ionian coast (200 km), between Cape Peloro and Cape Passero, includes tall jagged cliffs, magnificent beaches and discreet coves. The ancient Greeks first settlement was in this part of Sicily, in Naxos.The strong currents do not allow much sand to deposit, so many beaches, especially in the northern part, have shingle and pebbles, smoothed by the water. The beaches of the coast of Messina (up to Taormina) are not very wide and the Peloritani Mountains are close to the coast. Taormina is the most popular destination of this area and there is an unusual view of Isola Bella and the attractive beaches of Letojanni and the Naxos Gardens.The impressive Mount Etna overlooks the whole area. The black rocks of the coast of Cyclops, between Acitrezza and Catania, are of volcanic origin. Between the port of Catania and Agnone there is a wide gulf with a long beach, known as Playa. After Agnone, cliffs replace the beach, although there are coves and small beaches all the way to Augusta, where oil processing facilities were built despite objections. The coast is known as Costa dei Saraceni (Moors coast). The next town after Augustais Priolo, followed by Syracuse, where there are beaches and cliffs.Past the marine natural park of Capo Murro di Porco there are a number of pleasant beaches with fine, golden sand, a popular destination for swimmers and tourists. The attractive beaches of Avola are near the Vendicari natural park, a beautiful area with thriving Mediterranean vegetation, old salt-pits and tuna fishing nets, as well as discreet beaches such as Eloro, Calamosche, Cittadella and Cavettone. The environment here - fine white sand and picturesque rocks - is completely unspoilt. There are many sunny beaches in Marzamemi and Portopalo di Capo Passero, in which the salty breeze carries the scent of the aromatic plants growing in the surrounding countryside.
